Delts Attract Overwhelming Student Interest

by Paula M. Marcheschi

Delta Tau Delta Fraternity, the University of San Diego's new addition to the Greek system, has concluded its first Rush on campus. With an "overwhelming" 140+ men expressing interest, over 50 bids were distributed and accepted this week.

Fr. Owen Mullen, Interfraternity Council Advisor, commented, "This is one of the largest groups [interested rushees in the country] that has shown interest in one organization on a campus. This is a good indication that expansion was needed. Greek popularity is increasing."

Pat Gibbons, representative from the Delta Tau Delta Nationals, explained the reason for the large group of "founding fathers" chosen. He said, "There was tremendous interest on campus...a good cross section. We found that the University of San Diego is represented by a high quality individual. The men chosen will be a group that has vitality, enthusiasm and aggressiveness."

The individuals rushing Delts were invited to a reception and interviewed by members of the National staff.

During the rush interviewing process, a chairman, director of academics and treasurer were chosen for the affiliate group on campus.

The newly selected Chairman of the Delts Angelo Lombardo, a USD senior, expressed his excitement to have Delts become an active part of the USD campus. He explained, "Right now, we are trying to state our objective on the USD campus. The officers are meeting on a regular (almost daily) basis. We have a lot of hard work ahead of us, but we are definitely not lacking in imagination and motivation."

A retreat is planned for Saturday for the entire fraternity to get to know one another and define goals. Lombardo continued, "We hope to fit in well and work as smoothly as possible. We want to be thought of just like the other organizations. We're trying to establish our own image."

The Delts "founding fathers," pinned in the fraternity's pledge ceremony yesterday evening, make up an "official affiliate group on campus." Mullen explained that the Delts will become a colony in the spring semester and participate in rush along with the three existing Greek fraternities. The colony will have to be present on campus for a minimum of one year or a maximum of two to become a chapter on campus.

Delta Tau Delta was chosen to be invited on campus because its philosophy is most compatible to USD's. Placing a high priority on academics, Gibbons explained that the

by William Kent

"It was something that I never did, but I never took it seriously. Now I know that you can't even get into the car if you've had just one beer."

This student's attitude toward drinking and driving changed after her car plowed into a row of cars in the Valley parking lot at 2 am last Thursday. She was backing up rapidly when she hit the first car, creating a domino effect which ended in the substantial damage of four parked cars.

The San Diego Police Department collision report of the accident alleges that she had been drinking and was under the influence of alcohol.

This student's attitude toward drinking and driving changed...

Occurring just three days before the start of Alcohol Awareness Week, this incident serves as a striking example of what this week's program is trying to prevent.

Before police arrived, the USD Department of Public Safety responded to the collision, and began their own investigation. The situation was aggravated by the fact that the driver left the scene of the crime, creating what a security officer referred to as "a hit and run."

Before the driver came back to the scene about a half hour later, several of her friends appeared and one attempted to move the car. Two security officers warned him to stay away from the car. He would not comply and eventually the two officers took the keys from him by force.

"I really didn't expect them to slap the handcuffs on me..."

The San Diego Police arrived shortly after the driver returned and they took over the investigation. They administered a field sobriety test to driver, which the officer said she failed.

"I thought I passed it - I didn't think I did that bad," she said in an interview Tuesday. "I really didn't expect them to slap the handcuffs on me like that."

From there she was taken for a breath test, and then to jail.

The girl's roommate, who was at the scene, wasn't sure what was going on. "They threw her in the car and started [to leave]. They wouldn't even tell us where they were taking her," said the roommate during the same interview Tuesday.

"It was awful," the driver said of the experience. "They took me to a women's jail. They searched me and took off my

by Paula M. Marcheschi

Three possible candidates for the position of Dean of Arts and Sciences have recently been selected. Convening regularly since mid September, the dean search committee has successfully narrowed the number of applicants from seventy to these three, with a possible fourth prospective candidate who is currently being contacted for consideration.

In late September, additional information was requested from twelve of the seventy applicants who the committee considered were possibly qualified.

Dean search committee chairman Dr. Donald Peterson of the Chemistry Department explained, "We immediately sent letters to these candidates and asked for substantially more information in much greater detail." He added that references were contacted by phone and the candidates were examined much more in depth. All submissions were received by October 15.

"On Monday, October 17, the search committee met and selected four candidates worthy of further examination," continued Peterson. Three of the four have been contacted and confirmed.

These final applicants undergo interviewing throughout the month of November. Each one will individually spend two actual days on the USD campus attending meetings and interviews. Peterson said, "The candidates will be on a very hectic schedule. They will meet various administrators from President Hughes to the Dean of Students."

One to two applicants per week will be interviewed beginning the week of November 13. The applicants will attend breakfast with one of the committee members and continue meetings for the rest of the day.

These meetings will include two sessions open to USD faculty. The faculty attending the sessions will be asked to submit written evaluations of the candidates. These evaluations will be reviewed by the committee and considered when the members of the committee vote on a final decision.

In addition to the faculty, selected students will attend a luncheon with the applicants. Monica Forrest, one of the two voting students on the dean search committee, commented, "We will choose students with different activities and interests; we're even considering majors. We want all different input." She explained that a discussion will be held after lunch to receive the student reaction to the dean candidates.

Forrest expressed her experience as a student on the committee. She said, "It is a lot of work, but very enlightening. It required that we know what qualities we look for. As members, we have to consider how they [the applicants] view a small Catholic school." She continued, "It has really been a learning experience. I think that all four [final] candidates are worth looking at."

The dean search committee that was formed last year was disbanded when an agreement could not be reached. This year, however, Peterson expects the committee to reach a decision on the candidates by Thanksgiving and is hopeful a qualified dean will be selected.

great interest in the fraternity enabled them to comprise a group of that is "academically very stable."

Gibbons expressed the hope that by Fall 1989, Delts will be close in number to the other fraternities. He said, "We have an attitude that the sky's the limit. We can aspire to be the best on campus. We really want to be a part of things."

In addition to the new fraternity, sorority expansion is also progressing. Five sororities have been chosen to give presentations in mid November. After these presentations, a final decision will be reached. It is hoped that the sorority will be on campus by spring of 1989 to rush. It is expected to be a colony by Fall 1990.

Theatre Arts to Present Swedish Historical Drama

Theatre Arts News Release

USD's Undergraduate Theatre Arts program will be presenting a United States Premiere of a new Swedish play entitled "A Meeting of Queens."

This historical drama was written by prizewinning playwright Ingegerd Montan and has been translated into English by Dr. Anne-Charlotte Hanes Harvey of the SDSU Drama Department. The play centers around one historic night that is an actual event from Swedish history and could be called a Feminist message from the 16th century.

Directed by Pamula Smith Connolly the cast includes Megan Smith, Bridget Marnane, Mary Frances Stollenwerk, Holly Fabre, and Lisa Bollinger. The cast was three weeks into rehearsal before they got to read the last act. All the members of the cast and crew are USD students.

The play contains language that may be offensive to some people and it is not recommended for children.

Production dates are November 10, 11 and 12 at 8:00 pm and a Sunday matinee November 13 at 2:00 pm.

Before she was released she was fingerprinted and photographed.

"I was treated like a run-of-the-mill criminal off the streets. It was really degrading."

Two male friends of hers were handcuffed and taken away by police after they refused to listen to the officers' warnings to stop interfering. They had been repeatedly questioning the officers' actions and would not consent to leave. They were released about four hours later.

Ironically, the girl did not drive home from the bar she had been at because she had been drinking. "I had my friend driving my car that night because I knew that I drank and that I wasn't able to drive."

The trouble arose after she had been home for some time and decided to move her car to

to a better place to avoid a ticket. "It had been a while and I thought I was okay."

Of the four parked cars that were involved two were classified by the police report as having "major vehicle damage" while the other two were listed as "moderate" and "minor."

Of the four cars that were affected, two were classified by the police report as having "major vehicle damage"

None of the four owners were notified by security. According to security they were unable to identify the owners of the cars.

"I called [security] and I was really mad," said the owner of the first and most severely damaged car. "They said their computers were down and there was no way of figuring out whose cars they were."

According to Skip Walsh, Director of Residence Life, the police officers left notes for the owners on their cars.

"I am really thankful that nobody was around and no one got hurt," she said in the interview.

Despite the damage to the vehicles and her experience with jail, the driver feels fortunate about one thing. "I am really thankful that nobody was around and no one got hurt," she said in the interview.

Food Service Doesn't Serve The Sequel

It's Sunday, about nine o'clock. You want to grab a quick coffee and danish before you head on over to Mission Bay. Well you better head to Yum-Yum Doughnuts, because you won't get one here. The Marketplace doesn't open until noon. Well, how about that. We thought that the UC was supposed to be for students. It seems to us however, that the UC's services are nearly non-existent on the weekends.

By 4 pm on Friday, the Deli, Mini-Market, Bakery, and Grille are completely shut down. If you live on campus and don't have a car, then it's either the dining hall or the vending machines.

The Marketplace opens again on Saturdays, at 11 am, after many people have left campus, then closes at 3 pm, once again leaving students with very limited dining options in the evening.

On Sunday, for some mysterious reason, only the Mini-Market and Bakery are open during the day, and only from noon to five, freezing out the early risers. The Grille is open during the evening on Sunday, but where is it during the rest of the weekend?

In short, we believe that the UC food services should expand their hours, and be more accessible to the students during the weekend. The UC is supposed to be there for the students, but it does no good for the building to be open if the services contained therein are not.

Food service should either expand their hours of operation during the weekend, or come up with some pretty convincing reasons why they shouldn't.

Vista Vote Results

The Vista Vote is in. The only meaningful statistic that we garnered from this little exercise was that students here are pretty apathetic.

The original final tally was Bush 14, Dukakis 12. However Bill the Cat from Bloom County gathered thirty votes on the final day. Later a hastily convened team of handwriting experts concluded that the ballot box had indeed been stuffed in Bill's favor. Adding to the confusion, before press time, someone stole several Bush and Dukakis votes, leaving us with an eight to eight tie.

Okay, so the Vista Vote was a resounding failure, and we promise never again will we ask so much from our readers.

On a more serious note, we hope that the student turnout for the real election is considerably larger. Because voting is a privilege that few others in the world have, it is also a duty that must be carried out by the citizens of the largest nation in the free world.

Tuition Increases

So they raised tuition again. You were expecting something different?

USD's tuition hike seems large to some because with the ten percent increase, people can easily do the math and put a dollar value on the tuition increase. However tuition has increased by eight percent a year for the past several years, and the extra two percent this year will go for a much needed faculty salary increase.

It's sad to say, but looking at tuition increases across the country, USD's is about average. So before you get upset about the actual increase, stop and think about the 18 percent increase USC got socked with last year.

What we have to object to is the way the students were treated.

Their was no real effort on the part of the administration to get more than a token student input on the decision.

Not all students are knee jerk reactionaries who would have kicked and screamed at the increase. But involving a few more in the process would have done much to enlighten students about the need for the increase, and may have eased tensions and resentment that are already building.

It's time to start a physical fitness program for the USD Department of Public Safety.

When is the last time you saw a security officer outside of his vehicle, other than to give a ticket, or to handle some other situation that was already in progress.

Last semester I strolled through campus between 11 pm and 1 am almost every night of the week for the entire semester. Not once did I see a USD security officer on foot patrol.

It's time to get them out the trucks and walking around.

In my experience, security is greatly enhanced by getting the officers outside of the vehicles.

Walking around forces them to slow down and allows them to be more observant. There are also too many areas on the campus (the courtyard in the Vistas, for Romance Lives!

To the editor:

In response to Murphy Canter's article concerning the death of romance, I would like to say, "No, romance is not dead!" While at a party on the beach a few weeks ago, a friend and I were talking to a guy about this very subject, and it was quite a revelation. He talked for quite a while about his ideas of romance and what he would do for his "lady", whom he had not yet met. I was amazed to find that we all shared many of the same ideas and hopes of romance and love. I must admit that I felt men had lost their sense of romance, but I now know otherwise. It was so nice to meet a guy who sincerely shared the same feelings. I am confident that it is not dead, but hidden within. As my good and wise friend said, "...if we could only share what we really felt for someone we love for twenty minutes, wouldn't it be a wonderful twenty minutes?"

I would like to thank the guy on the beach and my friend for both a remarkable evening and for helping me come to the realization that there is hope in this world for romance and love.

As for Murphy, I REALLY do not think any girl with half a heart would complain about sand in her shoes after a picnic by moonlight on the beach with someone she cared about. Trust me on this one. Catherine Lilly the people of our nation be educated with regards to the ills of drug use. As the literacy week that just concluded last week indicated, there is a problem educating people in the skills considered basic in our society today. And in the inner city where educations are quite often the poorest is where a considerable amount of the drug problems exist. Good examples of the inability to communicate the necessary education to people are increasing teenage pregnancies, spread of venereal disease and, as the author of the previous article indicated, legal drug abuse. Does society need another variable, such as educating the masses with regard to how once illegal drugs that are now legal will be bad for them?

Another point in the previous article was the ability to "carefully regulate" the "related dangers" of drug use. Just what is drug use or abuse? Is there an objective way to measure, where is the line drawn? Specially cited were traffic accidents and a loss of worker productivity. Traffic accidents? This is a bit naive. A bit of subtle contradiction emerges from the drug legalizers point of view. As a nation, one of the main causes of the death of young people is traffic accidents. Quite a large amount of these are alcohol related, another drug that—legally or illegally—claims lives.

More on Drug War

To the Editor.

Drugs are one of the major problems of our society today, as many will agree. The government sends troops down to Central America to help the underdeveloped nations eradicate literal plantations of plants used to make cocaine. In Humboldt County, situated in fertile Northern California there is a virtual army of marijuana growers. The policing forces that fight these growers are trained to spot the farms from air.

Why does it take our government so much money to fight drugs in a seemingly ineffective manner? Why are drugs illegal in the first place? A previous article in the VISTA attempted to answer these questions. But the attitude offered in the article was one that drugs should, perhaps be decriminalized, but not condoned. As suggested by that article (and by many people), the drug problems would be controllable. Problems stemming from drugs and the trade created by them would decrease immensely. Undoubtedly this person is looking for a solution to the drug problems of our society.

The idea of legalizing drugs, but not condoning them, is not quite thought out. For one there is a contradiction implied by taking away the penalties for drugs and still suggesting they are wrong. One of the suggestions offered was that

If the Issue is Integrity, America Loses

Commentary by Brian Costlow

"If the issue is competence, Bush wins hands down." This is the conclusion reached by former president Richard M. Nixon in a "series of articles... (written for)... The Union and a limited number of other newspapers."

In the article Nixon chronicles the colossal mismanagement of the '88 campaign by Dukakis, and I agree he did mismanage it. However that's about all I agree with.

Nixon argues that Dukakis is in trouble from the start, because people don't vote against peace and prosperity, and the Reagan administration has delivered both. Yes Mr. Nixon, and you are not a crook. Of course there are subtle differences in meaning between the word crook and the word criminal.

The same kind of subtle misconception exists in the peace and prosperity statement. Yes, there have been no official wars, but we have lost U.S. servicemen in action in Grenada, Lebanon, and the Persian Gulf.

On the subject of prosperity, while inflation and unemployment are down, the deficit has skyrocketed, quality of life has barely maintained the status quo, and the stock market suffered the worst crash since the start of the great depression.

Of course we can hardly expect honesty from Nixon, but his statements echo the current line of Bush's thinking.

To call Bush's attack on Dukakis's pledge stand an exposure of Dukakis's "visceral opposition of needed weapon's systems" is so ludicrous it is laughable. Bush merely insinuated that Dukakis was not patriotic and ran with it.

Of course the Democrats haven't been Mr. Rogers when it come to honesty, either.

Of course we can hardly expect honesty from Nixon, but his statements reflect... Bush's thinking.

Dukakis has highly touted a program in Massachusetts called ET, as a successful example of workfare. But the program is voluntary, and never addresses the needs of those who really can't work. If you want to solve the welfare problem, you have to solve the problems of unwed motherhood first, something Dukakis has ignored. Dukakis also is hiding the fact that forcing employers to provide health care insurance is a hidden tax. Either the workers or the consumers will carry the cost through lower wages or higher prices.

The longer this election runs on, the more we should realize, If the issue is integrity, America loses either way.

Editor's Note: Portions of this article refer to an October 24 article by Richard M. Nixon which ran in the San Diego Union. For those of you who do not read the newspaper, this is an election year, and you are college students. I suggest that you start.

OPINION

Military Spending is Way Out of Control

by John Herrmann

Military Spending is a Threat to Our Economic Health

During the eight years of the Reagan Administration, military spending has skyrocketed. At the same time, we have the largest deficit in history and our economy is shaky. The government is spending exorbitant amounts of the taxpayers' money on military projects and programs that we cannot afford. It is time that the people of this country realize that the great military spending which many of them favor, is leading to the decline of the U.S. economy. It is time that the Pentagon dramatically cut back on its exorbitant spending on its high-priced toys.

This country is spending far too much of the taxpayers' money on military spending that is reasonable. The U.S. spends $1,164 per person on military spending and the military budget is 6.8% of our gross domestic product. Japan, on the other hand, spends $163 per person for its military and 1.0% of their gross domestic product on the military. Whose economy is stronger? While we are spending all these billions on defense, our allies are coming in the back door and buying us up and their economies are prospering.

Many people say that military spending

Not only does the military spending hurt our economy, but it diverts money from where it is badly needed. Eisenhower said, "Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and not clothed." There are many needy people in this country who are denied the help that they really need, because a lot of money is being diverted to the military. It also takes money away from other programs which are important to our country, such as public works.

A member of federal council studying the nation's highways, bridges, dams and other works said that the country's infrastructure deserves a "C+" grade and can be expected to deteriorate further if spending on public works does not increase. The government is spending more on the military than on the country itself. This is a disgrace.

An aircraft carrier costs $3.5 billion. To be protected, it has to be escorted by three destroyers at $500 million each. These are protected by anti-aircraft cruisers at $1 billion each. An attack sub is also needed, which costs $800 million. Plus 25-30 fighter jets are needed which cost

The U.S. spends $1,164 per person on military spending and the military budget is 6.8 % of our gross national product. Japan, on the other hand, spends $163 per person for it's military, and 1.0 % of their gross national product on the military. Whose economy is stronger? ...we are spending billions on defense.....their economies are prospering creates jobs. Wrong. Every $1 billion of tax money spent by the Pentagon on military purchases creates a loss of 18,000 jobs in this nation.

The 1981 military budget of $154 billion caused a net loss of 1,520,00 jobs to the industrial and commercial base of the United States. If this money had not been going from the taxpayer to the Pentagon, 3,234,00 jobs would have been created in industry, agriculture, mining, commerce and services by consumer purchases. Our military budget has gone up a lot more since then.

High interest rates, which conservatives link to government borrowing, is really caused by military spending. The government would rather blame others than itself for the problems it has created. Half the budget controlled by Congress goes to the Pentagon.

High defense spending also undermines the civilian economy by choking off investment in civilian research and development, resulting in declines of important industries, such as steel, machinery, consumer electronics and textiles. Consumer industry has been starved for capital. This is why we can't compete with Japan and other countries.

$45 million apiece. The total cost comes to about $100 billion. This money could do a lot of good for this country. It is ludicrous to spend this much money on something that would not last that long in a full-scale war. This is just one of many examples in which our money is being misused.

The trillion dollar Strategic Defense Initiative to "Star Wars" is a large waste of much needed money. It is also a program which we cannot afford. It is crazy to put so much money into something that could very likely turn into a dud. A trillion dollars could do a lot for this country. Where is the logic in spending money which we don't have? Money doesn't grow on trees.

If this country is serious about cutting the deficit and improving our economy, there have to be drastic cuts in our military spending. It is time that the people of this country and the Pentagon, wake up and smell the coffee. Let's cut back our military to reasonable levels, before our ship runs aground. The great military spending in this country is hindering us from developing to our full potential and may dampen the American dream.

The loss in worker productivity is outstanding. Whether by the absenteeism created or by the immeasurable amounts of work time wasted by someone under the influence of drugs, alcohol being another example, abused legally.

Although sharing the same ideals (hopefully) with the previous article, this article was written with the idea of not saving tax dollars, but lives. Who knows just how ineffective our government is in it's supposedly feeble attempts to fight the war on drugs? It has kept the price high on drugs which in turn, creates crime by some users, which is horrible, but at the same time limits economically those who can use drugs.

On a more personal note, if the government wants to waste money by trying to protect us from harm does it matter if it is fighting the invading army of another nation or fighting drug abuse that undermines our great nation at the individual level?

More on Murphy

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the essay by Murphy Canter "The Death of Romance" and would like to say that I completely agree. Guys are afraid that a lady will consider a moonlit walk on the beach to be dumb. More importantly they might be afraid of what the guy will do once they are alone on the beach.

As for poetry it should stay dead. It is dumb. Unless you are an english major and can create a meaningful poem, blank verse or otherwise, stay away from it. I've seen to many of the poems written by my friends for a class look like a pre-schooler wrote it.

I do disagree in part with Murphy's claim that girls don't like to receive flowers. They do like to receive them and they will tell you so. They'll even put them in water. The drawback is that the flowers they like to receive are usually quite expensive and they will keep them until they wither up and die.

Most of the time, girls will take the flowers as a signal that you are trying to be romantic and give you that old time honored speech. "Your a really sweet guy and you are really nice but I think we should just be friends."

However, I happen to be one of the retarded ones who keeps trying to revive romanticism. I believe that one day I will find the perfect romantic partner for me, but until then I will continue to crash and burn.

example) that you just cannot see from the inside of the trucks.

Not to say that they don't need the trucks at all.

Rather than just driving around the parking lots however, they should stop, get out of the trucks, and walk around the buildings. They can then see areas that they can't from the vehicles and check doors to make sure that they are locked. In fact, they probably should go into the buildings more often, and stroll the hallways. These last two functions are already performed by the RA's, but an extra pair of eyes never hurts, and an armed DPS officer is much more of a deterrent than a student would be.

Not to say they aren't doing a good job already, I just think they can do better.

Apathy Runs Rampant Through the Streets of USD

by John Roberts

If there were a procrastination club on campus, I am sure many of us would join first thing tomorrow. If there were an apathy club on campus, I am not to sure many of us would care...

Nonetheless, there is not a procrastination club at USD, but instead there is an apathy club that has just been formed.

Do you care? Quint Goodrich hopes you do, and in fact, he is the president of the newest formed club on campus—the Apathy Club.

The purpose of the Apathy Club is to raise the level of consciousness of the students on our campus.

Goodrich feels that there are too many students who remain unaware "of items and issues of concern both locally and globally." Therefore, Goodrich hopes to enlighten those both in the club and out of the club.

Currently there are fifteen members in the club. When asked who he wants and expects to join, Goodrich replied, "We are hoping to get people who care and who want to make a difference. We want to raise consciousness with a capital 'C'."

One very interesting note about the Apathy Club is that even if one is to join, one is not obligated in any way to engage in every aspect and activity that the club ventures into (hence the name "Apathy Club").

Goodrich hopes to have a pool of students to bring in and promote new ideas for the club.

When asked how the new club will benefit the students and campus of USD, Goodrich's reply was, "It certainly can't hurt for people to be active in and be more aware of the world in which we live."

The club also plans to publish a bi-weekly or monthly news letter which will serve as an open forum for debate and discussion of interest for the students of USD.

If anyone has a further interest in the Apathy Club or would just like further information, you can contact the club through Student Organizations.

Do you care to make a difference?

Treat Yourself To A Safe Halloween

by Thomas Edelblute

Easter Seals is promoting a "Safe Halloween" by promoting gift certificates for children.

Safe Halloween, according to Linda K. Ellis, grew out of the concern of "tainted treats" which have threatened children's safety in the past. To return the safety, and some of the fun, Easter Seals has put together a book of coupons and gift certificates. The book, which is sold for one dollar, contains $26 of coupons.

This is the project of 17 sponsors, which include Sea World, Penguins Frozen Yogurt, Taco Bell, Wendy's, Square Pan Pizza, Yellow Brick Road Arcades, and many others. The book represents 14 big businesses representing 700 retail outlets. The coupons can be used to buy pizza, yogurt, entrance to Sea World, bowling, carnival rides, and many other treats. Some of these are nutritious, others are fun, but all are safe for they do not involve the uncertainty of receiving tampered candy during halloween.

The project is endorsed by law enforcement agencies, including the San Diego Police Department, and the San Diego County Sheriff.

Furthermore, the money raised by the coupons goes to promote Easter Seals, a group dedicated to helping disabled children. Special projects the Easter Seals offer include:

- Funding of special equipment to foster independence for children and adults
- Three summer camping programs for children and adults
- Transportation and job placement services funding
- Adaptive equipment and learning aids to schools serving the disabled
- Recreational and therapeutic swim programs for infants to adults
- 20 separate grants to Children's Hospital Health Center
- Active support groups for both clients and family members

The coupon books have proven themselves to be a successful fund raising project. According to Ellis, they sold 32,000 books in 1982, the first year this fund raiser was held, and has grown ever since. Last year over 104,000 were sold. This year, 180,000 books are out in circulation, but Ellis does not know how many of those will actually sell. Since its inception, Safe Halloween has raised over $354,620.

Ellis says the Easter Seals have thought about holding other Safe Halloween fundraisers, like Carnivals. But these type of things take some of the fun out of tick-or-treating.

West Hillside Damaged

by Damon Valentino

During this past summer, something dissappeared.

The natural vegetation that had covered the West Entrance had been removed during the summer months as a result of the University's ongoing re-landscaping project.

Landscaping the West Entrance was a continuation of prior landscaping projects which have included the East Entrance and other areas around the campus.

Roger Manion, Director of Physical Plant, stated that the project had cost $16,000, which included the costs incurred in purchasing trees, various plants, and new irrigation and sprinkler systems.

The decision to plant palm trees was made to keep consistency throughout the campus, however, problems have been occurring.

According to various professors in the Biology department, this choice is not conducive to the natural environment.

Due to the sloped nature of the entrance, the stripping away of natural ground cover, and the choice of trees which require larger than normal amounts of water, it is feared that the hill will soon erode.

The hill, which is composed of alternating rock and sand layers, was the choice of many science classes to get a closer look at the local geological and biological substances near the University.

At times, classes would walk to the West Entrance to observe the landscape because it was "an excellent source of native San Diego vegetation", as one faculty member was quoted as saying.

The average time for vegetation to take hold and root itself sufficiently ranges from thirty to forty years and for this reason the hill was exceptional in its natural resources.

Another concern expressed was in regard to the amounts of excess water that runs down the hill when the new landscaping is being watered.

Fright Night at USD

by Celine Vachon

The time is drawing near: the time for spirits to raise from their graves and haunt the living, the time for Dracula to open his coffin in search of young blood, the time for Jason and Freddy to seek revenge... the time for Halloween.

Among USD students, it is also the time to decide that haunting question, "What am I going to do from Halloween?"

Traditionally, a large percentage of USD students have gone to Santa Barbara to join in the festivities which include more "tricks" than "treats." The students remaining have taken advantage of frat parties or evenings on the town.

This year, however, AS Film Forum together with AS Social Committee and Dining Services have planned a Halloween dance, movie, and dinner to provide even more ghoulish entertainment for your Halloween weekend. Both the dance and movie will take place Saturday, October 29 in Forum AB.

To begin the evening, Dining Services will provide a Halloween dinner which students can take advantage of with their meal card.

Next, the Halloween dance will begin at 9:00pm and last until the twelve chimes of Midnight. After Dark will provide the music as well as an illuminating light show.

Also running during the dance will be a silent movie accompanying the DJ music. For all those monstrous appetites, pizza and drinks will be available.

Students are encouraged to come in costume and be prepared for a chilling evening equipped with ghosts, ghouls, witches, and all kinds of things that go bump in the night.

The movie will immediately follow the dance at Midnight in the Forum. The feature presentation will be The Hunger, a 1983 contemporary version of the vampire legend, starring Catherine Deneuve and David Bowie.

Mary Smigelski, Film Forum Director, selected this movie to correspond to the theme of Halloween. On discovering this, Estella Lopez, Social Committee Chairman, wanted to have a Halloween dance. The two decided to combine the events into one evening.

The crowd is anticipated to be large because it will not conflict with Sigma Pi's frat party on Friday.

Scream in the Dark on Halloween

by Stacey Stanfield

BOO!!!

Did that scare you? If not, maybe you're brave enough to endure the terrors of "Scream in the Dark." This could prove to be the scariest experience for USD students this Halloween. The haunted house is jam-packed with classic horror scenes like Frankenstein's Lab, Mortuary, Torture Chamber, Mad Doctor, and Grave Yard, plus some more modern frights like Swamp, Insane Asylum, and Nuclear Blast.

Tickets are $4.50 each, or $4.00 with a coupon obtainable at 7-11. Groups of ten or more also receive a 50 cent discount, which is not for use in conjunction with a coupon. For an additional $4.95, you can purchase an unlimited ride pass to carry the thrill of the haunted house over to the carnival rides which will be running Monday through Thursday.

If you and your friends are looking for a fun, yet terrifying way to celebrate this Halloween, check out "Scream in the Dark." It's open now and continues through October 31st. The location is Cajon Speedway in El Cajon. Take Highway 8 East to Highway 67 North. Exit at the Bradley Avenue off-ramp and turn left two blocks down on Wing Avenue. Parking is plentiful and free. Don't forget your costume!

MUSIC AND DANCE:

Our favorite count comes back to haunt us Oct. 28-30. DRACULA once again finds young girls' necks to brand with his mark. The spooky tale of this original, real life vampire is presented by the California Ballet at the East County Performing Arts Center.

The Museum of Man gets ready once again for their "Haunted Museum." Sure to send chills up your spine with natural phenomena. If you find that letting your "little ones" go out to trick or treat this year is a bad idea, then this event is one of safe and inexpensive thrills. Oct. 28-31, 7-9:30 pm.

Another Homecoming Candidate? Or, is this just a Halloween Goblin making an appearance?

Gene Hackman as Lt. Colonel Hambleton

Bat-21's Heroism Comes To Screen

The Reel Life

by Tom Grady

BAT 21 starts off with a great image: in the foreground, two men are having a leisurely chat while taking practice swings on a driving range. Suddenly, behind them a huge helicopter lands slowly, loudly, stirring up a violent dust cloud. Yet they continue swinging, chatting, barely noticing the thundering aircraft behind them. This kind of poetic irony recalls some of the tableaux from Apocalypse Now. But this not, repeat not, Apocalypse Now.

This is BAT 21: a routine but fairly entertaining survival epic that joins elements of the war quickies of the 40's with the buddy films of the 70's and 80's. At 53, Lt. Colonel Hambleton (Gene Hackman) has never seen combat. On a routine flight, he is shot down behind enemy lines. He maintains contact and develops a friendship with spotter pilot (Danny Glover), and together they attempt his elaborate rescue.

The Vietnam War is used as the backdrop, and yet any war would have fit this film's suit. In fact, WWII would have fit a bit better. BAT 21 has a nostalgic, "This one's for the Gipper" feel to it that is oddly appropriate. The cynicism and chaos of Vietnam are put aside to focus on Hackman's plight. This is a good choice since the film succeeds in action where it fails in depth.

Director Peter Markle is reasonably talented at setting up suspense in a scene. He's most successful when he stays with Hackman and his series of perils. When we're out of the jungle we notice how laughably corny the tough guy dialogue is. Also there is an unintentionally hilarious display of fireworks prowess near the end of the film! You can just picture the 13-year-old in Markle while watching these strings of explosions saying, "Wow, cool! Awesome, woah!"

And throughout all this is Hackman. His performance is truly the glue to this film. He displays an exhaustive array of emotions with perfect conviction. Hackman has such an affable non-actor presence that he could read the phone book and make it watchable.

But what of Danny Glover? His acting is engaging enough, but his post-Lethal Weapon career has lead him to vanity. He's obviously been to a gym where he was told, "We're going to pump (clap) you up." Unfortunately, his weight loss has left his face with many trench-like bags. At times he looks 20, at times 60. He would have been perfect as Charlie Parker in Bird.

Sly and Robbie Rock the Navy

by Peter Meyer

Last Saturday 91X sponsored a free concert in downtown San Diego featuring the legendary reggae rhythm section of Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare.

Previous to the concert was the finish of the "Light The Night Against Crime" 10K run. The location of the concert was the Broadway Pier. Nestled in between a Navy destroyer and a Coast Guard destroyer was a reggae concert, how ironic.

Opening the show was the hideous pop group Information Society. Even worse than that the show was hosted by pop-has-beens Sparks. What I really want to say, was that the concert atmosphere was not conducive to enjoying some of reggae's greatest musicians. First of all it isn't fun to listen to reggae when you are surrounded by herds of pop trendies who read Teen Beat and think that Johnny Depp would be the ultimate boyfriend. Secondly, I couldn't stop laughing at the navy dorks walking around with this blank stare wondering what in the hell was going on on their pier.

The only bright spot of the entire evening was the incredible show that Sly and Robbie put on. They were definitely irie. Their back up band, The Taxi Gang, with Freddy McGregor and Maxi Priest were definitely hot. They were in the groove man. Their one and only set lasted for about an hour. This concert was good. It was also free!

This legendary duo has jammed with everybody who is anybody in the reggae world. Sly and Robbie have jammed on too many albums to list and have played at numerous Sunsplash festivals.

USD hasn't had a really decent show yet. But the Sigma Pi Halloween party with Don Carlos and Swelele should be completely out of control and is your best bet for a raging Halloween party other than going to Santa Barbara. Reggae shows bring a beam of hope into the darkness of mid-term despair. Overall the concert's bad points were really lost in the joyous musicianship of Sly and Robbie and I can't wait to see them again.

Legal Weapon Wins A Label

by Salomon Rojas

Legal Weapon is a group whose album I accepted to review, with reservations, expecting little from a group that looked as if it came out of a battle and they lost. How wrong it was to judge the book by the cover, or the musicians by their attire as it were. Legal Weapon is an LA based band which has fought for an audience and currently has a large underground following. Now they are emerging out of the ground, ready to influence an even larger audience. This group has steadily been releasing singles and albums over the past few years and just this year MCA signed them up, aware of their abilities. The ragged appearance serves as testament of their struggle to make it big in the hard hitting music business, and it looks like they now have an edge.

This record is entitled Life Sentence To Love. The title cut along with "SKB" (Skateboard), and "Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye" are by the most active moving and frantic songs. This gives them something of a punk rock appearance. However, this notion is dispelled with the appearance of "Hurt", "Tears of Steel", and "Indigo Blue" which could be classified as classic rock. These provide a sharp contrast in that they are much slower moving songs with deep meanings included.

Each song is played with ripping instrumentals which do not overpower themselves or the singers. The melodies and harmonies enjoy a musical hide and seek, each given an opportunity at being the center of attention. The lead and bass guitars provide pulsating rhythmic phrases which carry the music in different directions.

The youthful energy coming from the band provide definite images: of passionate people searching for new ideals, a search that is seemingly endless; of anger with the situation of the world delivered by sharp notes that do not give way to careless uncertainty; of hunger for better times coming from a group which is used to famine; of relationships that have gone stale like moldy bread. Surely these topics hit close to home in the life of many people so check out Legal Weapon today.

USD Student To Play Lark

by Peter Meyer

USD may not be known for its' famous alumni or party reputation but as soon as Paul Abbot graduates it'll be known for putting out fine musicians.

Paul and his solo electric/acoustic set will begin the night and open for the Boys Next Door at the November 3rd Lark down in the Grill. Paul is from Pittsburgh, PA and has been playing steadily for the last six years and it shows in his playing.

He said he couldn't really label his style but when really put to the question he said, "I don't know, maybe rock or fusion jazz. He cites his primary influences as Frank Zappa and Charlie Parker. The other day I had a chance to sample three of his demo tapes. They ranged from punk/thrash to jazz/easy listening. One tape was all solo-acoustic and contained a semi-respectable cover of Jimi Hendrix's "All Along The Watchtower" and a slow, bluesy tune called "Night Club Jitters"

The thrash tape sounded like it was recorded in a garage which is what thrash is supposed to sound like. This tape isn't safe above six on the volume knob and ten will cause permanent brain damage.

Overall Paul Abbot is a very promising guitar player and his set on the 3rd should be impressive. He tries hard and deserves a large audience. Afterall you don't have to stay for the good ole' Boys Next Door.

Shocked Brings Back Folk Music

by Peter Meyer

The album cover of Michelle Shocked's new record, Short, Sharp, Shocked says it all. It shows her being choked by two San Francisco riot cops. The picture first appeared on the front page of the San Francisco Examiner some years ago.

Michelle Shocked has taken an abrupt change in style. Whereas her first album was recorded on a walkman around a campfire at a Texas folk music festival, her second one was recorded in a studio, with backup musicians, and a producer.

Her first album Texas Campfire Tapes was hailed as premiere American folk music. Short, Sharp, Shocked is no less. This album puts Michelle Shocked into the same league as John Denver. Now quit laughing about John Denver, he is an excellent musician and everybody knows the lyrics to "Sunshine On My Shoulder".

The album opens with "When I Grow Up", a definite rainy-day blues tune with Michelle singing near the bottom of her vocal range. Her vocal style is very similar to that of Sinead O'Connor. Michelle shifts into a higher gear with her second song "Hello Hopeville", a faster blues tune about abandoned lovers. "Memories of East Texas" is her third song. It is also a plea by Michelle for someone to help her escape her new fame.

Michelle ran away at 16. Since then she has lived as a squatter in San Francisco, New York, and Amsterdam. She currently "lives on a house boat in North London next to Old Fred who lives in an ambulance with his dog, Trouble." Michelle was never really after the fame she now commands. She never expected the album to sell, in fact an album wasn't even her idea. But, before she knew it her album was at number one on the independent charts.

Side one ends with "Grafitti Limbo". This tune has some excellent harmonica tracks that were layed down by Rod Piazza of The Mighty Flyers.

Side two brings us a rockin' song called "If Love Was a Train". This fast paced blues/folk tune with its' orchestral organ melodies is a definite high point on the album. "Anchorage" follows and is bound to propel Michelle even farther into the limelight. This slow, soulful song recounts a long distance friendship to an old friend through the letters written, over years to various locations all over the world, including Anchorage, Alaska. This song has already gotten some airplay including "The Tonight Show".

"V.F.D" is an ode to volunteer fireman. This joyous childhood flashback song tells of Michelle and her friends' fire escapades of youth that the "V.F.D" had to take care of. It's also about growing up and leaving your friends of childhood. Michelle also imparts her incredible musicianship on the animals with "Black Widow". This song is dedicated to the hapless, and mateless female Black Widow.

In one of the most bizarre duos of music history Michelle chose to play with M.D.C, one of San Francisco's most famous punk bands. "Fogtown" is the tune. It tells of the scary reality that the homeless face with sections of thrash followed by gentle acoustic folk guitar. This song is definitely one of the better tracks on this record.

Overall Short, Sharp, Shocked is excellent. It will definitely be on my top ten list for 1988. It should be on yours.

Kill All Class Hogs Now!!!

by Tom Grady

It has come to my attention that there is a certain population of students that should be nuked. You know who they are. They're hated by professor and student alike. They're the type that love to hear themselves talk. They are, genus: swiniferus, species: exclassia, commonly know as... The class hog.

Scenerio: The professor asks a question; three hands weakly rise up but not before one hand shoots up like a geyser from hell, complete with weird vocalizations that resemble constipation. If the professor doesn't call on someone within a three second period, the loudmouth launches in anyway. Sound familiar? Next, The jerk-aholic answers the question in a phony formal manner, (lots of "basically"s and "simply"s as if this dweeb is encapsulating his/her limitless information for our benefit). But it doesn't stop there. Dorkbreath continues, repeating himself or worse, lapsing into a personal anecdote. (Oh no, not another story about your dog, PLEASE!)

I also enjoy watching the professor getting that glazed over look. You know the look: like they've just come out of a nice long session of electro shock therapy? They've given up the urge to primal scream, so they just stand there with a "I know this grin is dumb, but maybe they'll shut up if I keep nodding a little faster," look.

This zero won't shut up because:

A) The father is a marketing consultant or worse, an advertizing wiz and has drilled his child senseless with car salesman rhetoric.

B) The peabrain hasn't done the reading and figures gobs of class participation will compensate.

C) The age of grunge-butt is somewhere between the professor's and God's, so fossil-face has to show the teach that he/she knows more than the average whippersnapper.

D) They're genetic freaks. They were born that way.

Are you familiar with this animal? This is the type that, in grade school, scrambled to get first in line. (I can understand for lunch, but for flu shots?) This is the type that has a cow if you have 13 items in the 12 item lane. And this is the type that thinks he/she's politically correct by watching reruns of That's My Momma and wearing "Yes, I do mind if you smoke" buttons.

I once timed one of these verbal dissertations. It took up more time than the words of the professor. I only mention this in pity for the less boisterous in the class. Often, I've noticed that, just as a rather timid class-mate is about to offer a point, sewer lips crashes in with tales of Rover's potty training. And these classes are graded partially on class participation.

Stand up for your rights! Talk to the prof. Talk to the loudmouth. (Yell at the loudmouth) Do whatever you have to do to make the classroom an arena for equal participation. You are paying too much money to be an audience for a fellow student. I'm not one to promote violence, BUT... if all else fails, consider a body slam, or head butt - gets 'em every time.

I Don't Have A Ghost of a Chance

Life and other jokes

by Kent Sligh

It's almost Halloween again, but I don't think I am going to dress up this year. Trick-or-treating has lost most of its appeal for me.

Oh, I don't mean to discourage any of you readers who still want to give it a try, but you have to realize that we aren't as young as we used to be.

There's a whole new generation of trick-or-treaters out there, and it's getting so us veterans can't compete. These kids who are in the business now have a lot of advantages that we never got.

Their costumes are store-bought, lightweight, and built for travel.

These outfits fly in the face of tradition - the nights when ghosts, witches and devils ruled the streets are gone. These days all you see are Smurfs, He-Man, Care Bears and E.T.

I have been trick-or-treating since I was four, and for the past fifteen years I've gone as a ghost. A plain ghost. That's right - just a white sheet with two round holes cut in it for eyes.

I've always been proud to be a ghost.

I've walked around many a neighborhood dressed as a ghost shouting "Whoooo Whoooo." I don't mean to brag, but I think I've scared quite a few people in my day. Because ghosts are scary.

E.T. isn't scary. E.T. looks like an insect that would roll over and die if you sprayed it with Raid (incidentally, you have my permission to try this if any show up at your door).

E.T., Smurf, Yoda, Care Bear and all other "cute" costumes should be banned from Halloween.

As for Smurfs, they are nothing but mutant leprechauns. Only nobody wants them around for St. Patrick's Day because they are blue. They are not Irish, they're probably Polish or something. Well I have news for Smurfs - we don't want any Polish leprechauns running around on Halloween either.

Right now lots of Polish readers are probably wadding up the paper and... wait a minute - Polish readers? Nevermind.

Actually I shouldn't make fun of Polish people because some of them are intelligent and articulate and more importantly some of them are members of the National Rifle Association.

Getting back to trick-or-treating, I want to know what's wrong with kids today? Aren't ghosts good enough for them? These kids have forgotten the true spirit of Halloween.

To tell the truth, the children aren't all to blame for my retiring from trick-or-treating. Lots of adults have contributed too.

For years adults have discriminated against me because of my age. They don't like ghosts over six feet tall. Bigots!

They say cruel things like, "Aren't you a little bit old to be trick-or-treating?" Then they never give you as much candy as they gave the Smurf that was just ahead of you.

When these people don't come through with a treat it's time to play a trick on them. When I was younger I used to throw eggs at their house or tip over their garbage cans. Now I find that I take a lot more pleasure in stealing their car and leaving it unlocked in Tijuana.

But it's all over. After fifteen years of trick-or-treating I'm hanging up my ghost sheet. You readers shouldn't feel too bad, there's nothing you can do. Oh, I suppose you could all send me candy - but that's a silly idea. The Vista office is in the UC. Ask for Kent.

Just because I'm not going to get any candy this year, don't think that I'm going to join those poor people who have to stand by the door and give away candy. No sir, I found a way out of that one.

I'm going to leave an empty bowl on my porch with a note on it that says:

"I am sick and unable to come to the door - please take only one."

Need a Political Issue? Have a Burrito!

by Murphy Canter

The problem with the presidential campaign this year is the lack of issues so rather than write an article for Off-Beat this week, I've decided to create an issue. Here's my issue - burritos should be made the national food.

Burritos, more than any other food, symbolize America. Just look inside of one-what do you find? A melting-pot of ingredients, an assortment of the world's outcast food, a virtual cornucopia of things that look unedible.

There's even patriotism in burritos. The red sauce symbolizes the blood spilt by our forefathers kicking everyone out who was here before them. The white sour cream which represents the peace that the Democrats will bring if elected or the peace the Republicans will keep if re-elected - depending on which commercials you see. Finally the blue which - wait a minute, there's no blue in burritos. Oh well, I couldn't think of anything for blue to symbolize anyway.

The burrito has the quality that the American government thinks it has - no matter how hard you try, it's hard to screw one up!

Finally, this is a good issue because both candidates won't say the same things about it.

Michael Dukakis will be all for it because he can speak Spanish and if you ferlow a renegade burrito for the weekend, all it can do is cause indigestion and perhaps wayward gas.

George Bush will have a tougher time with this because Dukakis has never vetoed a bill requiring the heating of the national food in public kitchens and he won't be able to pin the label of "liberal" on Mexican food, although many have tried.

Now I know what you're saying: "Murph, come on, burritos? What about Social Security, taxes, the homeless, South America?!"

Well, I've always considered those issues important, but burritos are really good and Taco Bell is having a sale (that's right, I watched the debates!)

In short, burritos should be made the national food - because I'm sick of hearing how good things are from the Republicans and how bad they are from the Democrats!!! You be the judge-on November 8 should we go vote for the best Mexican restaurant? Would you like to see a poll showing how many people prefer beef over chicken? Can I get my candidates with no onions, please?

Soccer Team Splits Pair On Road

Sports Information Center

The University of San Diego men's soccer team, rebounding from a tough loss to the University of San Francisco, got a late goal from senior captain Chris Duke to down UC Berkley 1-0.

Duke, a fullback from Las Vegas, Nevada, ran onto a corner kick attempted by sophomore Jason Pearson and with 1:47 remaining, rammed it past Berkley goalkeeper Matt Simi.

Freshman goalie Doug Wedge made three saves for the Toreros as he recorded his second shutout of the season.

The weekend began with the Toreros taking on the University of San Francisco last Friday. Sophomore Bob Welsh, a forward from Santa Clara, tallied first in the contest. His goal at 35:47 gave the Toreros a 1-0 advantage.

USF's Ole Clausen tied the match two minutes later, netting a header from in front of the goal. The Don's George Vukic scored the game winner at 77:54, his goal gave USF a 2-1 WCAC victory.

USD played a near-perfect game last Tuesday, in its 5-0 shutout of Azusa Pacific. Sophomore Bob Welsh scored first for the Toreros, drilling the ball into the net from 20 feet out at 10:53.

USD took a 2-0 halftime lead on sophomore Trong Nguyen's first of two scores, at 32:50, then put the match with three second half goals—Trong Nguyen, a penalty kick at 70:19; sophomore Vince Bianci, off a corner kick at 77:45; and sophomore Leo Ronces, following two one touch passes at 84:20.

Sophomore Marc Duggan, making his first collegiate start in goal, recorded the shutout. USD out shot the Cougars by an amazing total of 33 to zero.

The Toreros conclude the 1988 home season tomorrow with a WCAC match against nationally ranked Santa Clara. The game is scheduled to begin at 3:00 pm on the Valley soccer field.

Toreros Lose Tough One To Tigers

by Chris Orr

Last Saturday before 2,800 fans, the University of San Diego football team suffered a tough loss against Occidental College 20-16. It was a close game that in the end came down to one play.

With less than a minute to play, the Toreros found themselves on the Tiger seven. It was fourth down and six. Sophomore quarterback Brendan Murphy took the snap and rolled out to his right. He threw a low pass to senior wide receiver Ken Zampese.

When Zampese came up with the football the initial crowd reaction was that he had caught the ball, but the referees rule the pass incomplete, the ball had hit the ground first.

The game was a seesaw of scoring with Occidental getting on the board first with a 22 yard field goal by Mark Collingsworth with 5:58 remaining in the first quarter.

The Toreros came back with 43 seconds left on the clock. USD scored six points on a 41 yard drive and nine yard touchdown pass by Murphy to junior running back Virgil Enriquez. Freshman kicker Jim Morrison successfully made the point after to put the Toreros in the lead 7-3.

In the second quarter the Tigers went up 10-7 after a one yard run by Kevin Vegas and an extra point kick by Collingsworth. USD regained the lead with 2:40 left in the half when sophomore runningback Ty Barksdale made it into the Tiger endzone for six. Morrison made it 14-10 with the extra point kick.

Near half time Occidental led the game 17-14 after quarterback Tony Werbelow completed a 19 yard pass to Freeman with only 35 seconds left. Collingsworth was successful in his extra point attempt. The Tigers increased their lead by three more points on a 40 yard field goal, after recovering a Torero fumble, with no time left on the clock.

The score remained 20-14 until only four minutes remained in the game. USD scored a safety when the Torero defense forced Occidental punter Jeff Bedell to step out of the endzone.

In the game Brendan Murphy threw for 101 yards and one touchdown pass, while he was not intercepted or sacked thanks to the Torero offensive line. The Toreros leading rusher was junior runningback Todd Jackson who gained 50 yards for the night.

Offensively USD passed and rushed for 284 total yards for the night, while Occidental gained 319 yards.

The loss puts USD at 3-3 for the season while Occidental goes to 5-1 in WCAC play.

On Saturday the Toreros travel to La Verne, CA to play the University of La Verne Leopards. Kickoff is scheduled for 1:30 pm.

The Vista welcomes any member of a sports club or Official Sport to write for the Sports Section of the Paper. The deadline is Monday night at 8:00.

Heavy Metal Stars Race At Del Mar Grand Prix

By Kristine Ashton

"THINK... Don't Drive and Drink" was the message last Saturday when top recording stars came to Del Mar Fairgrounds to participate in the Dodge International Star Challenge (DISC) Championship celebrity race.

Drivers included Vince Neil and Tommy Lee of Motley Crue; Ted Nugent, Stephen Percy and Bobby Blotzer of Ratt; Jeff Carlisi of .38 Special; Mick Fleetwood; Lee Curreri of "Fame"; Alto Reed of the Bob Segar Silver Bullet Band; Juice Newton; Fee Waybill of the Tubes, and Otis Redding III.

The celebrity drivers all completed an intensive racing school program and received their competition licenses. All 12 competitors were top finishers in one of the previous DISC races held at Road Atlanta, Lime Rock Park in Connecticut, and the Mid-Ohio sports car course.

Saturday's race lacked the anticipated excitement. Crashes by Curreri and Newton caused over half of the 20 minute race to be run under a caution flag. Neil, the winner of the Road Atlanta event, was knocked out of the race after receiving a flat tire, forcing him to return to the pits and lose his second place position. Bobby Blotzer won the race, with Ted Nugent and Tommy Lee coming in closely behind.

Alternate drivers Don Dokken of Dokken, and Craig Chaquico of Starship were unable to race, but did attend the event. Chaquico compared racing to playing live with his band: "There is the same rush of adrenaline, but racing is more exciting for me, since it's something I don't get to do very often."

"DISC is a unique program," said Charles B. Kitz, Dodge car general marketing manager. "It combines the natural appeal of top recording stars with the excitement of auto racing to send a message to young drivers." Dodge prepared 16 identical 1988 Dodge Daytona Shelby sports cars for this final DISC event. The DISC 1988 Championship Race took place in the midst of the Camel Grand Prix of Southern California, which lasted from October 21-23.

Conference Finals This Weekend

Sports Information Center

The University of San Diego cross country teams will attempt to annex something they have achieved before, a WCAC conference title when they compete in the West Coast Athletic Conference championships this weekend in San Francisco's Belmont Park.

The men's team, as it has all season, will be paced by Dan McNamee. McNamee has finished in the top six in every meet thus far this season.

Also expected to be competitive are USD runners Max Lawson, Sean Perkins, Matt

Meyer and Brett Harris.

USD's Sue Chen is given a legitimate chance to win the women's race. Already this season she has finished first in the Fullerton Invitational, Chapman Invitational and the Loyola Marymount Invitational, as well as a tri-meet with Cal State San Bernardino and Chapman.

Teammates Melinda Smith, Michelle Gillies, Nancy Nadeau, Wendy Wibbles and Missy Duarte are expected to combine with Chen to keep USD in the hunt for the team crown

Women's Tennis To Compete In ITCA Championships

Sports Information Center

Head coach Sheri Stephens and four of her top players will head to Pacific Palisades to represent the University of San Diego at the ITCA Women's All-American championships.

The Torero entourage will consist of junior Aby Brayton, sophomore Tonya Fuller and freshmen Chris Scmeidel and Sakolwan "Tuck" Kacharoen.

All four players have been entered in singles competition. Fuller and Brayton will combine to form one doubles team, while Scmeidel and Kacharoen, who reached the semi-finals of the Rolex tournament last weekend in Irvine, will form the second doubles unit.

The site of the event is the Riviera Country Club in Pacific Palisades, California. The main draw will be held October 27 through the 30

Volleyball Team Loses Twice In Pacific Northwest

by Meg Estey

The University of San Diego women's volleyball team traveled to the Pacific Northwest to challenge the University of Portland Pilots and Gonzaga University. After a victorious non-conference match against the University of Pennsylvania last Tuesday, the Toreras headed up north on a positive note.

Unfortunately, the Toreras returned to San Diego without a victory. In Spokane last Friday, the Bulldogs defeated the Toreras in five games, 5-15, 15-17, 17-15, 15-11, 15-17. Jody Conners and Cindy Silldorf led the Toreras defensively with 14 and 13 digs respectively. Angie Rais and Conners led the way in the kill department.

In Portland the next evening, the Toreras were defeated in four games, 11-15, 7-15, 15-12, 4-15. Conners had 14 kills and 9 digs in the defeat. Ruth Bajo also played solidly contributing 9 kills and 15 digs.

USD's record fell to 7-12, 2-5 in the WCAC after the pair of losses. This week the Toreras have only one match as they step out of the WCAC to take on Hofstra University, Saturday night in the Sports Center at 7:30.

On the national level, USD is ranked fifth in block percentage. Suzanne LaSaltz and Angie Rais are the reason for this national ranking as they are currently 14th and 16th individually in this category.

Big Games In IM Soccer

The last week of the regular season saw a number of key contests, but none more important than that between the top two womens speed soccer teams.

On paper, Still Hangin' looked much too good for Ann Caro's Buck Naked squad. However, on the field Gina Labovitz's team was playing without their starting goalie and was forced to play the second half short handed. Still Hangin' struck first as Kim John scored on a tough angle shot at the 11:14 mark. The score went to 2-0 when Tammy Kelly left footed a rebound into the back of the net with only one minute to play in the half. This lead was cut in half 59 seconds later when Emelie Tirre beat the keeper and the halftime whistle with a tap in of a fine crossing pass. Kim John and Jenine Lawlor traded second half goals to make the score 3-2 with about ten minutes to play. At this point, Buck Naked was playing six against five and they had been for five minutes already. However, Still Hangin''s defense stiffened and when Stephanie Strategos stopped Tirre's point blank header with time running out, the #1 ranking was safe.

The mens league saw three big contests in the final week of play. Too Raw For Eddie proved they are not too old to play in this league as Al Limberg's team defeated AGSP 4-2. The veteran squad simply outthstled their younger opponents and took an early 3-1 lead. AGSP fought back, but could not overcome Neil Becker's great play and team-leading two goals. In the battle for the first round bye, Too Raw For Eddie was too much for AGSP.

Law School put their #1 ranking on the line against a determined Hung Over Butt Luvn' It. The first half was a real defensive struggle, and the Phi Kap team actually had the better of the play, though they had to settle for a 1-1 tie. The second half was all Law School as Mark Hellenkamp scored twice in this final half to insure his team a first round bye and a 3-1 victory.

AIA nailed down the final playoff spot with a 7-4 victory over the Falcons. With their season on the line, Wade Walker's team started fast scoring twice in the opening minute. The Falcons came back to tie the score, but goals by Paul Tobin and Bo Landress (really!) once again upped the lead to two goals. Walt Kubelun's second goal ended the first half scoring and cut the deficit to 4-3. After Eirik Hjelle tied the score at the 25:30 mark, Walker headed in the game winner for AIA. Late Goals by Will Healy and Sean Moore provided the final margin in this 7-4 win.

Beach Volleyball Fun For All

It was a full day of fun in the sun as fifty seven doubles volleyball teams took to the sand last Saturday. Thanks to sponsorship by Togos Sandwiches, Penguins Yogurt, and Classic Beach Beachware (how did Sigma Pi get on the t-shirts?), everyone had their fill of food and prizes. Perhaps the only disappointment of the day was the AS set-up crew who did their best imitation of a Sigma Chi intramural team and failed to show up. Special thanks are in order for IM staffers Camille Barbaro and Kristin Curry who worked double-time setting up the nets and courts.

Recapping the days events, the mens league saw the most action and the most upsets en route to John Pagliuso and Jim George's championship victory. The first round of playoffs provided the first surprise as Jay Wesley and Larry Close knocked off #4 seeded Byl Berger and Tom Holland 21-18. In the quarterfinals, it was the second seeded team of Jeff Lake and John Dilworth who fell to Chris Labonte and Don Jewett, also by the score of 21-18. This left the top seed, Pagliuso/George to go against #3 ranked Ken Patrick and John Sperrazzo for the championship. In a game much closer than the score would indicate, Pagliuso/George came out on top 15-6.

The womens division was once again owned by Leisa Hagen and Jody Conners. The only question was who would finish second, and that turned out to be Deanna Macgregor and Theresa Mostero. The championship game was simply no contest as Hagen and Conners rolled to a 15-1 victory.

As the sun began to set, the mixed doubles championship game was a familiar site to those who have followed this tournament over the years. On one side of the net was the defending champs, Tony Knight and Jody Conners. On the other side, Leisa Hagen would try again to knock off her womens league partner. Only the fourth player, Tim Vowles was a newcomer. Down 14-10, Hagen and Vowles rallied to win the title 16-14. Actually, the entire semifinals was almost identical to last year's. Ken Patrick and Teri Thompson's quarterfinal victory over John Pagliuso and Deanna Macgregor caused the only change.

Powder Puff Football Tournament is Scheduled for November 12. Sign up now and join in on the fun.

Upcoming IM Special Events

The volleyball season ends this week, your softball team failed to qualify for the playoffs, and you forgot to sign-up a team for the 3x3 basketball league. Now what are you going to do with the rest of your semester? Well, you could actually study. Then again, midterms are over and finals are a long way away so studying is definitely out of the question. You could watch the World Series...sorry, that's already over with. Well, how about participating in an IM special event? Starting with the November 4 Scramble Golf tournament and ending with the November 20 Over-The-Line Classic, the IM department is offering four more events to fill your weekends. Check out the calender below and sign-up for the event(s) of your choice:

Event	Date	Entries Due	Entry Fee
2 person Scramble Golf	Friday 11/4	Wed. 11/2	$6.50 per person
Homecoming canyon Run	Sat. 11/5	Sat. 11/5	$1.00 per person
Powder Puff Football	Sat. 11/12	Wed. 11/9	$10.00 per person
Over-The-Line	Sun. 11/20	Wed. 11/16	$6.00 per person

Still Hangin'

It was the game of the year, #1 vs #2, and a re-match of last year's finals. However, the defending champs had to do it without their regular goal keeper. To make matters worse, Tammy Kelly had to leave five minutes into the second half forcing Still Hangin' to play sharthanded for the final 15 minutes. Still, a champion is a champion and Still Hangin' overcame all obstacles to defeat Buck Naked, preseve their #1 ranking, and earn the distinction of being named Budweiser IM Team of the Week.

Budweiser

Jamaican Bobsled Tops In IM Tennis

Although most of the season tennis was a disappointment, the last week did show some hope of improvement. In an attempt to be fair, all teams were carried over into the playoffs. This included teams from one division in which only two of six games were played. Only time will tell if this attempt at fairness was in vain.

The men's A-league final standings turned out as many expected with Dave Bernauer and Don Morris on top, soundly beating Carri Pippin 18-2. In probably the shocker of the week, the number two ranked Tosiney was shot down by a hot Skunker team. Although this is still likely to be a two team race, don't underestimate the Skunkers' desire.

This week was rather brutal for losing men's B-league teams considering many scored only one or two games. The one exception came in the match between Toward/Tibbits and the Crazy Guys. Going into the final set the match score was nine games to eight with the winless Crazy Guys in the lead. But, it was not in the cards, or rackets to be technically correct as Toward/Tibbits snatched away victory by taking the doubles 6-3.

The co-rec A-league was also a disappointment this week as only half of the scheduled games were played. The Fatsos gave a highly ranked Taking Bets a good game but could not find that extra bit of energy to push them over the top. The final score gave Taking Bets the victory 18-11. In probably the best match of the week, On Top finished barely ahead of Frick and Frack in a battle for first place. The singles games were split at 6-0, leaving the doubles set to decide it all. After the smoke cleared, On Top was on top 12-11.

Can You Make This Call?

With championships being decided this week in the IM volleyball league, this week's you make the call question concerns a possible (though not likely) situation that might come up.

Hypothetically, let's say Eat My Spike's Byl Berger is serving at match point against Dive and Dig. Berger's serve looks good, but Ken Patrick uses the considerable leaping ability that we have been reading about to block the serve down onto Eat My Spike's side of the court. Now, you make the call- is this a side-out for Dive and Dig?

The IM department is looking to hire some additional officials to work the upcoming powder puff football tournament on November 12. All interested officials (including current football refs) need to attend a training meeting on Tuesday, November 8 at 12:00 noon at the Sports Center.

You Make the Call Answer: Blocking a serve is illegal. Give the point and the match to Eat My Spike (we said this was an unlikely situation).

Square Pan IM Players of the Week

Soccer is in the IM spotlight this week, and two of the league's best are honored as Square Pan IM Players of the Week. Both Mark Hellenkamp and Kim John play for top ranked teams and both needed to play their best for their teams to maintain their lofty status.

In the mens league, Law School found themselves in a 1-1 halftime tie against Hung Over Butt Luvn' It. Hellenkamp took charge in the second half, however, scoring twice to give his team a 3-1 victory. John scored twice and assisted on another goal to propel an understaffed Still Hangin' to a 3-2 victory over Buck Naked and maintained her team's #1 ranking in the women's league.
